

Body ×1

dark grey-brown · head, hump & tail · actual size

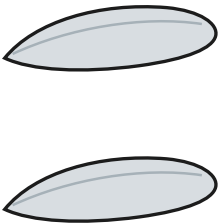

eyes ×2 · tiny · dark

the hump is the thorax —
the wings sit on top of it.

Wings ×2

pale grey · held over the back · actual size

soft & hairy — a midge folds them flat over its body.

Legs & feelers

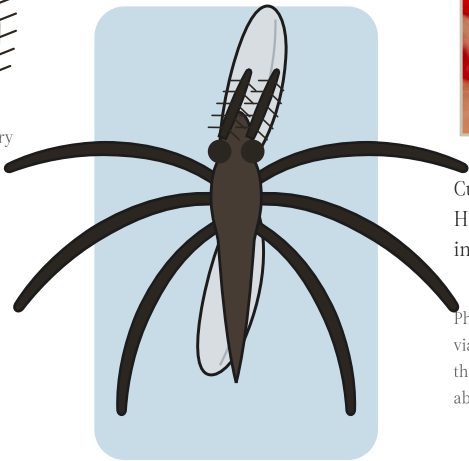

dark grey-brown · very thin · actual size

6 legs — three on each side.

Finished!

the same pieces, assembled

body down the centre · wings over the back · 6 legs out wide · ≈ 10 × 7 cm

The real thing

Culicoides impunctatus — the Highland Midge, Scotland's infamous wee biter (1–2 mm).

via iNaturalist. Photographed on the Isle of Arran, Scotland —
about 300 km from Manchester.

Did you know?

- Only the female bites — she needs a blood meal to make her eggs.
- Famous for ruining Scottish
summer walks.
- Breeds in boggy, wet ground.
- Most active at dawn and dusk,
in still, damp weather.
- A whole swarm can bite
thousands of times an hour.

How to make it

from your felt squares

- 1 Trace each shape onto
the right felt colour.
- 2 Cut out all 13 pieces
— they're tiny, go slow.
- 3 Build it on the mat →

Felt squares you'll use:

- dark grey-brown — body
- pale grey — 2 wings
- dark — legs, feelers, eyes

Blue Highland-pool mat is premade.
Print A4 landscape at 100% (actual size) · fold into 6 × 2 where the edge marks line up · cover = top half of row 2, column 5

Build it

lay the pieces on the mat

- 1 Lay the blue mat down —
that's a boggy Highland pool.
- 2 Place the little grey-brown
body down the middle.
- 3 Add 2 eyes and 2 feathery
feelers at the head.

Nothing is fixed — the pieces
just sit like a jigsaw.

...and again

it's a puzzle, not a glue-up

- 4 Fold the 2 pale wings
flat over the back.
- 5 Splay 6 thin legs out —
three on each side.
- 6 Done! Take it apart
and build it all again.

The tiniest — and bitiest — kit
in the set, in your hand.
